

“Hatred stirs up strife, but love covers all transgressions.”
(Proverbs 10:12)

We are presented with multiple situations each day where we must choose love or hate. It happens when we comment on the actions of family members, neighbors, and people we don't even know. It is tempting to assume malicious intent with someone we have never met and who belongs to a group of people we dislike. It is easy for us to throw someone like this under the bus, but we must ask ourselves if we are treating this person the way we would like to be treated. This does not mean we must like the person or agree with what they say, but we must begin to see them in a different light.

When we hate, we always think the worst. We would not like it if someone followed us around all day and every time we messed up, they would point it out and assume malicious intent. We would prefer people to love us by seeing us as human beings who sometimes make mistakes. When we begin to love one another and listen to one another, people will feel they are loved and respected, and this will transform our speech, relationships, and communities.

Choosing love helps us avoid the pitfalls of speaking words that are unkind, unfair, or untrue.

Aaron
